String harmonic - Wikipedia A string harmonic is a string instrument technique which uses the nodes of natural harmonics of a musical string to produce high pitched tones of varying timbre and loudness. String harmonics are "high pitched tones, like a whistle's, are produced when the musician lightly touches certain points on a string. Learn How to Play Natural Harmonics "Acoustic Guitar Natural harmonics are produced at specific locations, or nodes, that divide an open string into equal parts. The pitch is determined by the number of divisions. Dividing the string in half at the 12th fret produces the first harmonic; dividing the string into three parts at the seventh fret produces.

About "The Harmonics of Nature Hello "I'm Julian Shelbourne. I've been fascinated by how things work from an early age, and generally find the accepted, "educated" answer to be a well informed side-step, deception, or simply incongruous collection of ill-considered remnants of someone else's thought process.
